THE NEW ELECTION LAW.

The outcome is a compromise of parties and principles, and is, I conceive, "the golden mean."

The law is embraced in Bills 18 and 19. We have retained the State Commission idea, in which each of the two considerable parties have representation, the Governor being limited to appoint from lists furnished by the acknowledged organizations of each party. This is tempered by the selection of a State elective officer—the Clerk of the Court of Appeals—who acts as chairman and umpire of this board.

The County boards of Election Commissioners follow the same plan, two County Commissioners are from each greater party, are named from lists furnished by the party organization to the State board, the County Sheriff forming the third official or umpire of said board. This recognizes the county or local administration. The Sheriff was under the English form and is yet in most of the States the election official. In this law his relation to elections is preserved.

The precinct officials are appointed by the County boards from lists of sober, discreet, law-abiding citizens, (a murderer or felon being excluded). The voter, if unknown to the officials, or if the officials are in doubt may vote on subscribing to an oath to be returned before the grand juries, (provided some citizen does make a counter affidavit.)

The rights of parties and of the voter is well guarded. The officials are under penalties to do and perform their duties under the new law.

The ballots are preserved, and almost the entire range of duty in any position of election official is to receive and register and tabulate the vote and certify the same.

In the matter of doubtful or mutilated ballots there is, as there should be, the right of canvass or determination of the purpose of the voter.

It is a law that is just and fair, and promises the best results.

The time of the Legislature was given to the comparison of the laws of the States, consideration of the principles, the meeting of objections, and determination of what would best preserve the rights of the people and give an honest and undoubted expression of the public will.

It was a pleasing result that these laws were adopted with great unanimity by both parties. The session closes in mutual respect and good will.

The man who would make capital now for either party out of the proceeding to get this law, or by reflection on law, is more partisan than patriot.

Kentucky will now have the best election law of any State in the Union of States or Nation. Let us not forget that to make law is one thing, to respect and carry out the law is another. Let every good citizen of the State of whatever party remember that his obligation is now to energize the law, to give it respect, for under our government law derives its force from energized public sentiment.
